Mrs. Orson Rogers Gets Bad Twelve Foot Fall Into Store Basement-Military Committee Named-Peter M. Rose Returns to Stand Trial-Mortgage on Immaculate Conception Church to be Burned Thursday Evening-Obituary Notes.

At a regular meeting of the Officers' association of the Rhode Island National Guard, held in Providence, Major Arthur N. Nash, of Westerly, president of the association, in response to a vote adopted, appointed a committee on amendments to the militim law of the state. The committee is composed of Adjutant General Abbott, Colonel Illinghast, Major Gatchell, Captain Hamilton, Captain Marchaut and Captain Rittman. At the meeting suggestion was made that it would be better for the service to have all officers above the grade of second lieutenant appointed imstead of elected. This is practically the rute in Connecticut, it was stated, where all vacancies from first lieutenant up are filled by appointment by the adjutant general from the highest on a list of candidates, who must be commissioned efficers, who take a competitive examination. Thus a company in Harford might be officered by a captain from New London and the second lieutenant frem Hartford, the lates office being the only one the members of the company are permitted to have a vote in filling. This is the way bers of the company are permitted to have a vote in filling. This is the way the Connecticut militia law is inter-preted in the adjoining state.

Dr. Harris M. Wilder, of Smith college, has placed on exhibition in the Park museum, Providence, two models of the heads of Narragansett Indians. They were reconstructed from the skuls of two Narragansett Indians, one a male found at Jamestown, and the other a female from Indian Burying hill in Charlestown. The latter is of special interest because it is that of the daughter of Ninigret, the Niantic chieftsin, and is an exact duplicate of the model that Dr. Wilder recently presented the Westerly Memorial and Library association and which is on exhibition in the reading room.

The chief's daughter died in 1660

The chief's daughter died in 1860 and was buried in a log surcoplagus, surrounded by articles of value, in a parcel of land set aside for the purpose by her father. The skull was taken in 1858, came into the possession of the Rhode Island Historical society in 1862 and was later placed in Brown university. The model in Westerly attracts much attention and the green cloth that now girdles the the green cloth that now girdles the head is to be replaced by the head-gear worn by the Indians over two hundred and fifty years ago.

Four residents of the town of North Kingston died Saturday night within a few hours of each other, John H. Rockwell of Winkland, Henry M. Rep-nolds of Allenton, Mrs. Lydia M. Gar-dher of North Kingston village and Mrs. A. Linwood Northup of the same village. Mr. Rockwell was born in Lebsnon Camp severny years and and Lebanon, Comm., seventy years ago, and was a school teacher for many years, but later entered the grocery and gen-eral store business. De Vere Barber, the family physician, took charge of the case. Mrs. Rogers was taken to her home in West Broad street and was in a precarious condition on Sunday afternoon.

Mrs. Rogers removed a large rocker in order to get into the show window and was not attended by any of the clerks. The first knowledge those in the store had of the accident was when James Maxwell and Samuel Patten, who had seen the woman fall, rushed into the store and made the announcement. They horried down stairs, picked Mrs. Rogers up and carried her to a place of comfort and Dr. Scanlon was immediately called. Mrs. Rogers received a severe bruise instover the right eye, her left shoulder was dislocated and it is feared she sustained a fracture of the skull, Mrs. Rogers is 65 years old.

A similar accident befell a Potter Hill man about three years ago.

Peter M. Rose, the barber who was under arrest for embezzlement and released on bends pending trial in the Third district court, and who disappeared just previous to the date set for the trial, returned to Westerly on the $.55 train from the west Saturday night and will be in court to stand trial next Friday merning at the regular court session. The case was conular court session. The case was continued from time to time on representation of counsel for Rose, who said he would return to Westerly. The last continuance was for three weeks and will terminate Friday. Rose is under bonds of $600.
